Aims of the Course	The development of Chalcolithic period cultures in Western and Central Anatolia and the emergence of new regional cultures. The processes of interaction and differentiation with the Chalcolithic traditions of Eastern Anatolia and Northern Mesopotamia, which showed more rapid progress during this period, will be evaluated. In the context of new research conducted in Anatolia covering this 3,000-year period, the phenomenon of urbanization, trade networks, mining and metallurgy, large settlements, and demographic structures growing through agriculture will be addressed.
